I would like to let the reader know how I decomposed the professional talk to what I will call the casual language to which one can relate and simply understand better. Just in case there is any mystery, I am a child of public housing and of a single parent family of eight children; so while I was growing up, I was clueless to any words similar to epistemology. In the field, I often had to break down the million dollar words for myself in order to connect what I see with what I know. And so, the following thoughts were constructed in the meantime to create my creed for education. The development of a child is one of the major areas of focus to address in presenting a philosophical stance on education. To that, I believe that a child...
