Not illustrated. 1910 Excerpt: . . . of 500 was granted with an assurance that the scenario would be worked out, and the play produced, while encouragement is bestowed on five others, and five prizes of 100 each also allotted. Nothing is more certain than that Mr. Harriss generous plan will not only avail these and others who received favorable mention, but the plan itself is one that will be emulated, and thus a plethora of good material for the stage must of necessity come to the surface. Martin Beck, whose extraordinary rise in the last few years is discussed elsewhere in this volume, has also shown a fine discernment and much public spirit in awarding prizes and guaranteeing production, during the Actors Fund Fair, of a number of one-act playlets, a procedure which can only serve to give a great stimulus to vaudeville, the field in which Mr. Beck labors so intelligently. His encouragement to the unknown though ambitious writer will not end with this one opportunity; for the innovations which the vaudeville magnate has established on his vast Orpheum Circuit lead one to assume that, as far as vaudeville is concerned, the uplift so necessary and desirable, will go on until vaudeville itself will become a veritable mecca for budding genius. Mr. Beck has in mind the erection of a large building, where every phase of artistic creation will be encouraged and housed. The plans call for departments devoted to construction, each presided over by a master in his particular line;...
