The water gradually rises, and the sediment remains at the bottom. We are able to get rid of it in that way. We are not able to get rid of the sulphate. We had to try soda ash, as a carbonate of soda, mixed with the water. We keep up the same processes yet, and treat the water in this manner. I have to say the cost is something like three-quarters of a cent per 1,000 gallons; that does not include the cost of pumping. I think that about covers the cost of the process. All there was to it was the putting up the tanks, and the fixing generally for the handling of the lime. We had three separate plants. We have only two now. The lime is pumped from a central place. It has kept the water reasonably clean, and we...
